"I think that everyone who worked in fashion at that time knew a photographer who was in the wrong"

[modelling]," she says. "It just happened." It was an era of super-models, super-photographers and super-lux photo shoots. Did she ever feel vulnerable? "I've definitely been looked for jobs where there was an element of nudity involved that I've not been comfortable with. But I felt like I couldn't say so because I was on the job and I couldn't stand up and say, "I'm not happy with this." I think that everyone who worked in fashion at that time knew a photographer who was in the wrong."

Though Brewster regularly sits front row at Saint Laurent and Chanel shows, she's keen to point out that she doesn't model for a living any more. The model-to-actor jump is historically a in both fields and I have nothing to be ashamed of," she says conviction, though she also mentions she doesn't feel it proper 'actor actor'. "I'm too silly for that."

She's happy to be back 'home' in London. She lives in a with her Versace co-star Alex Vlahos (when I raise an eye she buries her head in her arm and moans, "no") and spends watching The Great British Sewing Bee on telly, going to that shall not be named, and eating at Jolene in St Newington. Her slyness gets the better of her when she's ogised in the street. "Ground, swallow me up," she laughs. "social aspect is something that I am tackling, but being si

Anna Brewster is good at keeping secrets. The 30-year-old actress stayed quiet for MONTHS about her role in the latest Star Wars film, where she plays badass bounty hunter Bazine Natal. Her most terrifying moment? Having to make up an alien language for her character on the spot. "There's nothing like having Harrison Ford harking around [on set] to put on the pressure." She splits her time between south London and Paris, where she's currently filming season 2 of the French cult TV hit Voyelles. Anna plays Louis XIV's mistress, Madame de Mantes, a flamboyant gambler with a razor-sharp wit. When she's off-duty, you'll find her working on her specialties — her favorite is one she made of David Hockney's A Rigger Splash.
